

Academic Integrity Policy

We take pride in the quality of assistance we provide to academic professionals, researchers, and students. Our assistance includes proofreading, copyediting, translating, indexing, and formatting. Depending on the nature of the service, in some cases we may offer corrections or suggestions to logic, argumentation, and empirical data – not unlike the types of assistance that are frequently given during the peer-review process. In some cases, for example, logic or argumentation may be affected by inaccurate word choices or syntax, and we strive to ensure that these inaccuracies are corrected. In more serious cases, logic or argumentation may be inconsistent or weak in validity, and we give clients “feedback” in these instances. We believe that failing to do so in the face of obvious deficiencies in logic or argumentation would be both unethical and irresponsible.

At the same time, we also take pride in respecting the originality of our clients’ works and the need for scientific integrity within the university and research milieus. E2Publish does not and shall not provide, condone, nor endorse “ghost writing” services that draft original writings, writing segments, or research for students, academics, and researchers. To do so would also be both unethical and irresponsible.
